Catalina Boy Temperament Overview:

The Catalina litter is overall very confident and self-assured. They show no stress in new situations, whether around new people or in circumstances that could typically be considered stressful. These puppies are curious and investigative with new sights and sounds, including those that should be considered startling. They demonstrate good memory, focus, and problem-solving abilities—right on track for their age and stage of development. They have excellent motivation for interaction and strong motivation for both food and toys.

Socially, these puppies are appropriate in their interactions with one another, as well as with cats and other dogs. They are also socially appropriate with people, though they can sometimes be a bit pushy in their eagerness to gain and keep attention. They are rarely vocal. While they do use their mouths to initiate and engage in play, their bite inhibition is excellent. None of the puppies show red flags or possessiveness.

Overall, this litter gives a very happy and social impression. Any puppy in this group shows good potential for therapy work.
